Acknowledgement of Country

The NSW Department of Education acknowledges the Ongoing Custodians of the lands and waterways where we work and live. We pay our respects to Elders past and present, who are the keepers of knowledge, songlines, and stories.

We are committed to honouring Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Peoples' unique cultural and spiritual connections to land, waters, and seas, as well as their enduring contributions to society.

We acknowledge that Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Peoples are more likely to experience disability than other Australians and often face greater challenges in accessing support. We recognise and value the voices of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Peoples with disability who have contributed to this plan.

Secretary's foreword

Public education is built on the belief that every student, educator, and support staff member feels included and valued in all that they do. The NSW Department of Education is committed to developing an equitable and outstanding education system marked by equitable outcomes, opportunities and experiences for every learner and colleague.

Equity cannot be achieved without the voices of people with lived experience. Our students and staff with disability, parents and carers, and workplace leaders are the reason this document exists and its most valued contributors.

The level of support, passion and deep subject knowledge our stakeholders brought to the consultation process for this DIAP has prompted us to publish this interim DIAP to allow further time for genuine, ongoing and collaborative consultation beyond the initial feedback already incorporated.

The final iteration of our 2026-29 DIAP is expected to be published by the end of September 2026. It will incorporate a defined and comprehensive set of outcomes measures, and a deeper articulation of the alignment to key commitments and priorities. We will continue to hold dialogue with our key stakeholders to ensure the DIAP strongly defines our commitment to improving the lives of people with disability throughout NSW.

I extend my deepest gratitude to those who are contributing to the ongoing development of this action plan. I look forward to sharing the final plan with you soon. For now, let's get started.

About the Interim DIAP

Our commitment

We are committed to building an equitable and outstanding education system where people with disability — including students, staff, families and community members — are respected, valued and supported to participate fully, safely and confidently.

The NSW Department of Education is one of the largest public education systems in the world. Our scale gives us both a unique responsibility and a unique opportunity to lead disability inclusion across schools, workplaces and communities.

People with disability bring expertise, insight and strengths that enrich our system. Yet barriers in attitudes, environments, processes and systems continue to limit access and participation.

NSW Government committed to a 5.6% target rate for the employment of public sector employees with disability by June 2026.

This plan aligns with the Department's Our Plan for NSW Public Education, reinforcing our commitment to an equitable and outstanding education system where every student, staff member and community member can learn, grow and belong.

The Interim DIAP 2026–2029 sets out a clear, practical three-year roadmap to:

- remove barriers to learning, work and participation.
- strengthen disability confidence across the workforce.
- embed inclusive design into every environment and system.

- ensure people with disability are partners in shaping solutions.
- build a culture where inclusion is the norm, not the exception.

This strategy is a commitment to sustained, system-wide change – grounded in evidence, informed by lived experience, and aligned to National, NSW Government, and department commitments and priorities.

Acknowledgement of people with disability

The NSW Department of Education acknowledges the expertise, lived experience and guidance of people with disability and the broader community in shaping this plan. Their insights have directly informed the priorities, commitments and measures within the Interim DIAP.

We also recognise the significant contributions of our Disability Employee Network, the Disability Strategy Reference Group, and the NSW Disability Council. Their advice has strengthened our understanding of barriers across the department and helped refine the actions we will take to improve accessibility, inclusion and equity.

The commitments in this plan draw on these contributions, alongside feedback from staff across the department and alignment with NSW Government priorities. Together, this input has ensured the Interim DIAP reflects what matters most to people with disability and the communities we serve.

Consultation

The department sought feedback on the draft Disability Inclusion Action Plan 2026-2029 from a diverse range of stakeholders across the department and the broader disability community, including unions, professional associations, staff and student representative groups, and key NSW Government Stakeholders such as the NSW Disability Council and Disability Strategy Reference Group.

In order to more comprehensively engage with the feedback we received, the department has committed to releasing this Interim DIAP and continuing the rich and constructive conversations that started through our initial consultation process.

Development

The Interim DIAP was developed by a working group represented by staff from each division of the department and our Disability Employee Network (DEN). The working group synthesised key priorities and commitments, planned and proposed initiatives, and identified opportunities for improvement to develop a proposed set of initiatives aligned to the structure and intent of the NSW Disability Inclusion Plan 2026-2029 (NSW DIP).

The draft DIAP was shared with external stakeholders for consultation, intended to understand:

- whether the draft DIAP reflects the priorities and lived experiences of people with disability.
- which initiatives stakeholders believe will have the greatest impact.
- what challenges or risks may affect implementation.
- where further clarity, resourcing, or system changes may be required.

Consultation activities included written submissions, targeted discussions, and feedback from advisory groups, staff networks, and representative bodies. Rich feedback and discussion prompted the department's decision to release an Interim DIAP and allow time for further collaborative consultation.

Purpose

The department's Interim Disability Inclusion Action Plan (DIAP) 2026–2029 sets out the key actions the department has committed to or will deliver to improve disability inclusion across education settings and workplaces.

It is a requirement of section 12 of the Disability Inclusion Act 2014 (NSW) (the Act) and is underpinned by the principles and objectives of the Act. Under the Act, Public Authorities must develop Disability Inclusion Action Plans. Public Authorities are NSW government departments, local councils and some other government entities.

Over recent years, there have been significant disability reforms at both a national and state level. As the policy landscape continues to evolve, so too will the work of the NSW Government and department to reduce barriers to inclusion for people with disability and deliver accessible services.

About our community

In Australia, in 2025:

- 1,125,502 school students received an educational adjustment due to disability. This represents 27.0% of total enrolments, up from 25.7% in 2023 and 18.0% in 2015.
- 2.8% of all school students were provided with extensive adjustments to enable them to participate in education on the same basis as other students. A further 5.2% were provided with substantial support, 11.7% were provided with supplementary support, and 7.4% were supported through quality differentiated teaching practices.
- among school students who received an educational adjustment due to disability, 53.0% of adjustments were provided to students with cognitive disability, 36.3% to students with social-emotional disability, 8.3% for students with physical disability, and 2.4% for sensory disability.

At the NSW Department of Education, in 2025:

- Employees with disability made up 1.7% of the department's workforce according to Workforce Profile data, and 7.2% according to the People Matter Employee Survey (PMES).
- Employees with disability requiring work-related adjustments made up 0.5% of the department's workforce according to Workforce Profile data, and 3.3% according to the PMES.

- According to the 2025 PMES, the overall engagement score for all staff was 67.5%. For staff with disability with a workplace adjustment in place, engagement was 65.3%. For staff who needed a workplace adjustment but didn't have one, engagement was 52.9%.

Foundational concepts

Language used in the NSW Department of Education Interim Disability Inclusion Action Plan 2026-2029

In this document we use person-first language for example, 'people with disability'. This is to focus on the person rather than their disability.

We acknowledge that many people prefer identity-first language, for example 'disabled people'. It is also important to acknowledge that some people may prefer to identify with a community with a shared identity.

Similarly, Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples and multicultural communities may have a very different understanding of disability, and in many languages there is no word for disability in the way it is broadly understood in English.

The NSW Government recognises and respects these individual and community preferences and will use them when applicable.

Understanding disability

Disability can take many forms. It can be physical, mental, intellectual, neurological, and/or sensory. When combined with an inaccessible society, it can affect a person's ability to participate in the same way as everyone else. Disability can be short-term or long-term, temporary or permanent, and can be present at birth or acquired later in life. People can and often do have multiple disabilities.

The language in the Disability Discrimination Act 1992 (Cth) currently reflects a medical model of disability by viewing disabilities as medical conditions requiring diagnosis and treatment. By framing individuals with disabilities as having an innate ‘problem’ needing resolution, this often leads to harmful stereotypes and people experiencing social exclusion.

The social model of disability acknowledges that a person’s disability is not what is disabling. Instead, the barriers they experience are from a society made up of inaccessible physical spaces, attitudes, and communications. The NSW Government is committed to removing or reducing barriers so that people with disability can fully participate and contribute to their community.

The human rights model of disability emphasises that disability is natural and valid and that people with disability have the same rights as everyone else. In 2008, Australia agreed to the United Nations Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (UNCRPD). This means the NSW Government and community have a responsibility to ensure people with disability can exercise their rights, make informed decisions, and have their dignity respected.

Together, the social and human rights models shape how the NSW Department of Education works to build a more inclusive society. This includes actively involving people with lived experience of disability in the design of policies affecting them.

In its work, the department strives to develop a culturally safe education system that ensures the cultural, social and emotional wellbeing of First Nations people with disability as a priority. The department recognises the cultural strengths, identity, and community connections that keep First Nations people with disability strong.

The NSW Department is committed to addressing ableism – attitudes, behaviours and systems that prioritise the needs of people without disability and create barriers for people with disability. This commitment is not only conceptual; it directly informs how we design and deliver our work. Reducing ableism means embedding inclusive practices in our schools and workplaces, including:

- inclusive decision-making: ensuring people with disability and their representatives shape policies, programs and environments.

- accessible systems and processes: removing structural barriers in recruitment, technology, communication and service delivery.
- respectful workplace behaviours: building cultures where disability is understood as a valued aspect of human diversity, not a deficit.
- inclusive teaching and learning environments: designing school practices that anticipate diverse needs rather than requiring students to 'fit' existing systems.

By naming and addressing ableism, the department is strengthening its commitment to creating environments where people with disability can participate fully, feel respected and experience equitable access to education and employment.

Intersectionality

It is important to recognise the diversity of people with disability. The department recognises that diversity of experience is a core part of the communities we serve. Our approach is to design systems, supports and services that are inclusive and responsive to this diversity from the outset.

Disability can intersect with other parts of a person's identity including but not limited to age, Aboriginality, cultural and linguistic background, gender, religion, and sexuality. This can result in multiple and compounding forms of discrimination which can lead to a person being further marginalised.

The Act recognises that many Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples with disability may face multiple disadvantages. It acknowledges that cultural, language and other differences may create barriers to accessing supports and services.

Women and children with disability are potentially more vulnerable to risk of abuse or exploitation.

The Act also specifies that supports and services provided for LGBTIQ+ people with disability must be inclusive, culturally safe, and informed by ongoing, community-led engagement.

People with disability from multicultural communities, as well as members of the Deaf community, may also experience challenges accessing supports due to language and cultural barriers.

For people with disability living in regional, rural or remote communities, barriers often increase due to fewer services, transport options, reduced digital connectivity, and geographical distance.

Universal design

Universal design means creating an environment that is accessible to everyone, regardless of age, disability or other factors.

Some examples of universal design

Built environment	Digital systems	Communication	Representation
Step free entry, ramps and 'speaking' lifts. Accessible toilets with automated sliding doors. Visual and audio emergency alerts. Quiet rooms.	Digital content that meets Web Content Accessibility Guidelines. Digital services which meet the Digital Inclusion Standard. Printers which have large screens and 'speak'. Digital systems which work well	Online meetings which have automated captioning. Providing contact details which include both text-based (e.g. email) and verbal (e.g. phone) methods. Documents that meet the NSW Design Standard.	Consulting with people with disability. Boards and advisory bodies have representation from people with disability.

Some examples of universal design

Adjustable lighting.	with screen readers.	Easy Read versions of key documents.

What guides the Interim Disability Inclusion Action Plan

The department's Interim DIAP is designed to align with a range of legislation, government reports and commitments.

It is structured according to the 4 key pillars of the NSW DIP, ensuring alignment with the NSW DIP's whole-of-government priorities and significant agency-led actions. These pillars are as follows:

- Developing positive community attitudes and upholding the rights of people with disability.
- Creating liveable and safer communities.
- Supporting access to meaningful employment and independence.
- Improving access to mainstream services through better systems and processes.

The department's Interim DIAP is designed to put the principles outlined in the NSW Disability Inclusion Act 2014 (the Act) into practice by promoting the rights, inclusion and independence of people with disability.

Section 4 of the Act states that people with disability have the right to:

- be respected for their worth and dignity as individuals.
- participate in, and contribute to, social and economic life and should be supported to develop and enhance their skills and experience.
- realise their physical, social, sexual, reproductive, emotional and intellectual capacities.
- make decisions that affect their lives (including decisions involving risk) to the full extent of their capacity and to be supported in making those decisions, if they want or require support.
- be respected regarding their cultural or linguistic diversity, age, gender, sexual orientation and religious beliefs.
- privacy and confidentiality.
- live free from neglect, abuse and exploitation.
- access information in a way that is appropriate for their disability and cultural background and enables them to make informed choices.
- pursue complaints, like any other member of the community.

The Interim DIAP is also underpinned by the 2023 Disability Royal Commission recommendations, which call for Australian schools to deliver a more disability inclusive education via enhanced workforce training and support, improved data collection and use, stronger oversight, and greater accountability.

Breaking Barriers Report

In 2025, the department wrote and released internally the Breaking Barriers: The experiences of staff with disability at the NSW Department of Education report.

Drawing on 2024 PMES data and focus groups with staff with disability in schools and departmental workplaces, the report identifies the key barriers that shape the everyday experiences of our workforce.

The findings highlight persistent challenges in accessing workplace adjustments, navigating systems, and feeling safe to disclose disability at work. These insights confirm that staff with disability do not consistently experience equitable access to employment, career progression, and workplace support.

As one of the largest employers in NSW, the department has a critical role in modelling inclusive employment practices. The report's 12 recommendations – spanning workforce participation, workplace adjustments and leadership capability – directly informed the priorities and initiatives in this Interim DIAP. They have shaped our focus on strengthening accountability, simplifying systems, improving the consistency of workplace adjustments, and embedding inclusive design across recruitment, onboarding and career development.

By grounding this plan in the voices and experiences of our staff with disability, the Interim DIAP sets a clear pathway for meaningful, measurable change across the department.

Our Plan for NSW Public Education

The department's Our Plan for NSW Public Education: Transforming lives through learning 2024–27 sets the strategic direction for an equitable and outstanding education system across NSW.

The plan emphasises that every student should learn, grow and belong, with a strong focus on advancing equitable outcomes, opportunities and experiences for all learners. It recognises that addressing inequity and removing barriers is critical to ensuring every student can achieve their potential.

Equity and inclusion are central to the Plan for Public Education, including a commitment to:

- eliminating barriers to participation and achievement.
- embedding inclusive practices across learning environments.
- supporting staff to feel valued, included and equipped to perform at their best.
- embedding the voices of students, families and staff in decision-making.

The Interim DIAP supports these priorities by translating the Plan's system-level commitment to equity into practical actions that improve access, participation and outcomes for people with disability across schools, workplaces and communities.

Through this alignment, the Interim DIAP strengthens the department's ability to deliver an education system where inclusion is embedded by design, and equitable outcomes are achieved for all.

How we will measure our progress

This Interim DIAP is supported by a detailed implementation plan, which will be used for regular initiative tracking and progress reporting.

The department will compile an annual progress report that:

- outlines the actions taken in the year to date.
- provides a status update for each initiative.
- notes any changes in NSW Government or department priorities that may have impacted initiatives.
- evaluates system and cultural change through measurable metrics:
 - An increase in NSW People Matters Employee Survey (PMES) scores for staff with disability.
 - An increase in disability representation in workforce profile reporting.
 - My Say My Way and NSW Public Schools Survey data.

Interim DIAP progress reports will be provided to the department's Disability Steering Committee and Equity, Wellbeing and Aboriginal Education Sub-Executive Committee.

The department will also deliver progress reports to the NSW Department of Communities and Justice, in line with whole-of-government reporting requirements.

Our Interim DIAP plan

The department's Interim DIAP is guided by the 4 focus areas of the NSW DIP, which are linked to outcome areas of Australia's Disability Strategy 2021–2031. These 4 focus areas are as follows:

- Developing positive community attitudes and upholding the rights of people with disability.
- Creating liveable and safer communities.
- Supporting access to meaningful employment and independence.
- Improving access to mainstream services through better systems and processes.

The Interim DIAP sets out 30 actions across 12 initiatives, aligned to the 4 pillars, and designed to:

- foster positive community attitudes and empower people with disability.
- work to reduce barriers in education so that students, staff and community members with disability are supported to thrive.
- improve the experience of staff with disability through improved systemic support.
- improve how people interact with department systems.

This Interim DIAP will run from July 2026 to December 2029 (until replaced by the final DIAP).

Pillar 1: Developing positive community attitudes and upholding the rights of people with disability

Aim: To increase public awareness of the abilities and contributions of people with disability, to foster positive community attitudes and empower people with disability to exercise their rights.

Public attitudes and behaviours can be among the most significant barriers to full access and inclusion for people with disability. They can impact a person's ability to exercise their rights and their access to opportunities to participate in everyday life. People with disability deserve to experience respectful, inclusive attitudes and behaviours across all interactions.

Our goal

The department will foster positive community attitudes and empower people with disability by strengthening the provision, uptake and effectiveness of disability inclusion professional learning offerings, implementing strong measures to develop and recognise the contributions of staff with disability and increase awareness of disability and disability experiences.

Our outcomes

- Build awareness and understanding about disability to create a more accepting and inclusive culture.
- Increase opportunities for staff and students to learn about disability experiences.
- Improve visible representation and recognition for people with disability.

A truly liveable community needs to be accessible, safe and inclusive for everyone, including people with disability.

Employment rates for people with disability are significantly lower than those without disability across all sectors.

Meaningful employment is vital to support people with disability to attain economic security, social interaction and mental health, and increase opportunities to support individual choice and control.

Pillar 4: Improving access to mainstream services through better systems and process

Aim: To ensure that people with disability are able to make informed choices and access services, including mainstream government services and other community opportunities.

We will improve how people interact with departmental systems by making digital platforms, school processes, and service pathways more accessible, consistent, and user-friendly.

Our outcomes

- Students, staff and community members can easily access information on department websites.
